1. The aircraft construction department of Breda, Milan, is known internally as "Section 5". Air raid damage has reduced its pre-war productivity, but, in spite of this, a post-war reorganization of machinery and working method has now enabled the section to produce aircraft independently of the other Breda departments to which it formerly had recourse for various processes.
2. Approximately three hundred workers are now employed by the section which has the following at its disposal: three large hangars, an assembly hall large enough for the simultaneous construction of six to seven aircraft, and a machine shop. The latter houses about 120 machines among which are included lathes and milling, grinding, boring, and plate-making machines. The assembly and repair of motors is carried out in this shop.
3. "Section 5" also utilizes:
 - a. A testing shop;
 - b. A wind tunnel;
 - c. Technical and planning office;
 - d. A drawing office;
 - e. A records office; and
 - f. Administrative offices.
4. Working at full capacity the section can produce one two-engined aircraft daily. At the present time, however, there are no aircraft on hand, and activity has been solely limited to the four-engined B.Z. 308 which recently completed its trials.
